The Ukrainian invasion of Ukraine has been under way for two weeks, and with more than 2 million people in the displacement of its peoples. At the Valkyrie Palace on Thursday, the world met with the heads of the states of the representative states of the United Nations and the European Union to discuss the humanitarian and security situation in Ukraine.

The world leaders of the United States, Russia, France, Britain, China, and others have met to discuss the crisis and its potential escalation. The United Nations Secretary-General Antonio Guterres has called for an immediate end to the fighting and a return to negotiations.

On Friday, the Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky declared martial law, and his government suspended all flights to and from Russia. The United States imposed sanctions on the Russian economy and declared the freezing of all Russian assets in the US. The European Union followed suit with similar measures.

The situation is worsening as Russian forces continue to advance towards the Ukrainian capital, Kyiv. The United Nations is calling for an immediate ceasefire and for all parties to exercise restraint.

The world is watching closely as this crisis unfolds, and the need for diplomatic efforts and humanitarian aid is crucial to avoid a major conflict. The United Nations is working to ensure that aid reaches those in need, and negotiations continue to find a peaceful solution to this crisis.
