PM offers to resign

Sri Lanka’s Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe has offered to step down after protests forced the country’s president to resign on Saturday, saying he failed to resolve economic hardships and other political crises.

The 70-year-old politician, who stepped down amid a string of economic crises and rising inflation, said he would leave office only if the new government is elected within 30 days.

The move comes after weeks of protests against the government’s handling of the country’s economic crisis. The country is on the brink of defaulting on its debts, and the government has taken a series of unpopular measures to try to shore up its economy.

The new government must be formed before the end of October to prevent the country from defaulting, and the current government has been seeking international aid to help it weather the crisis.

The announcement of the resignation follows a series of political crises that have left the country in a state of uncertainty. The government has been weakened by a series of resignations from key ministers, and the opposition has been calling for a new government to be formed.

The move is likely to be met with mixed reactions, with some groups welcoming the offer of resignation and others calling for more radical action.

The country is currently ruled by a coalition of parties, and the political situation is highly unstable.

Under growing pressure, Biden signs executive order on abortion

US President Joe Biden signed an executive order on Friday aimed at protecting women’s reproductive rights, a response to the Supreme Court’s decision to overturn Roe v. Wade.

Biden, who has been under pressure from pro-choice supporters and anti-abortion activists to take action, signed the order in the Oval Office.

The order directs federal agencies to review and update policies and programs that protect reproductive health and rights.

It also makes a commitment to investing in education and training for health providers and counselors.

Biden’s move comes after the Supreme Court’s decision on Thursday, which struck down the landmark Roe v. Wade decision that had protected abortion rights for almost 50 years.

The decision means that states can now set their own abortion laws, with some states banning the procedure altogether.

The order also directs the Department of Health and Human Services to consult with the Department of Justice to ensure that all laws and regulations are being followed.

Biden said the order was a “step forward” in protecting reproductive rights.

“Today, we’re taking action to ensure that all women have access to the care they need to make decisions about their own bodies and health,” Biden said.

S hort bond and equities markets have already rung the bells of a potential slowdown in the economy, a development that could result in another recession and even deeper declines in the value of financial assets. The concern is that the US Federal Reserve (Fed), which is currently tightening monetary policy to combat inflation, may overshoot its target and inadvertently stifle economic growth. The Fed has raised interest rates multiple times in recent months to reduce inflationary pressures and boost the exchange rate against the US dollar. The government’s expectations are based on the assumption that the Fed will continue to raise interest rates until core inflation falls to 2%, which is considered the target rate for price stability. However, some economists and financial analysts argue that the Fed is moving too quickly and could cause a recession if it continues raising rates at the current pace. They also note that the Fed’s actions are likely to have a negative impact on the real estate and housing market, which is already facing challenges due to high interest rates and rising mortgage rates. Additionally, some experts argue that the Fed’s policies could lead to a more prolonged period of economic stagnation, which would be detrimental to the country’s overall economic growth. Therefore, it is essential to monitor the Fed’s actions closely and adjust our portfolios accordingly to minimize the risks associated with a potential recession.
Sri Lanka faces humanitarian crisis

A daily wage laborer waits for work at a wholesale market in Colombo, Sri Lanka, Sunday, June 26, 2022. Sri Lankans have endured months of shortages of food, fuel and other necessities due to the country's defaulting foreign exchange reserves and mounting debt, worsened by the pandemic and other long-term local issues.

For years, there's been a red flag for flying civil aircraft, as rules restrict flights over your line of sight. Not just because it's a bad idea — it's also a law.

But some drone operators recently got permission to soar out of the pilots' blind spot. They can now inspect high-value pipelines, assess home damage after a hurricane, or monitor seaports in the Netherlands and Indonesia. Some have been technically possible for years, but now the FAA has signaled that the policy is about to change.

Routine operations enabling some drones to fly beyond visual line of sight, or BVLOS, is a $13 billion industry worldwide, says Tom Watson, director of the Florida Institute of Technology's Unmanned Aircraft Systems Center. "The potential is huge for near-shore security, agriculture and delivery." But the FAA has long forbidden it.

"One big issue in the past is that we don't know where they are," said Epic Privacy Board's Jonathan Rich. "The drones won't be sure if they're flying over your house or your backyard.

"We have a framework and guidelines for operations enabling some drones to fly beyond visual line of sight, or BVLOS," said Adam Bry, CEO of California drone company Sensefly, which is supplying its drones to DoomsdayPreppers.com, a startup that is marketing its drones as "hobbyist" systems.

Bry said that his company, like others, has been seeking permission to use drones beyond visual line of sight for years. "It's been totally out of our control." But now, Bry said, the FAA has signaled that BVLOS operations are about to be allowed.

"The FAA has approved a 'waiver' program for operations enabling some drones to fly beyond visual line of sight, or BVLOS," said John Scott, a senior counsel at the Electronic Frontier Foundation.

The FAA said it is still reviewing how it will roll out routine operations enabling some drones to fly beyond visual line of sight. The FAA has not yet released details on how it will regulate a boom in off-the-shelf consumer drones, assessing home damage after a hurricane, or monitoring seaports in the Netherlands and Indonesia. Some have been technically possible for years, but now the FAA has signaled that the policy is about to change.

ELENA Rybakina came from behind to beat Tunisia’s Ons Jabeur 3-6, 6-2, 6-2, in the Wimbledon final to become the first player from Kazakhstan to win a Grand Slam title on Saturday.

Rybakina, 23, aimed to become the first player from the Arab world to win a Grand Slam crown.

“Of course, then we know to win the trophy I will still have many Grand Slam opportunities but maybe not this year,” said the 35-year-old, who, unless things change, will be unable to play at either the US Open or next year’s Australian Open.

“The one thing for sure, whether I won or lose on Sunday, I’m going to be happy. It’s a great achievement that I thought I’d never be a part of. Especially at 27. I thought it was the last stage of my career. But it just never thought I would be right here. I have a chance. Djokovic will not be as tall as big Grand Slam final and at Wimbledon, where the only player to beat him at that stage was Andy Murray in 2016.

Victory on Sunday would bring him a 2:1 Slam title, putting him ahead of Bjorn Borg and Rafael Nadal in the past. Kyrgios has spoken graciously about both this week, and has great respect for what they have achieved, but he does not think anyone will win this year.

“I’m aware of what’s on the line,” said the 35-year-old, who, unless things change, will be unable to play at either the US Open or next year’s Australian Open.

I don’t know how many Grand Slam opportunities I have left, but it’s great being able to play at it without the pressure that comes with it. I can say I’m happy for everything I’ve been able to achieve, and I’m really, really grateful for the opportunity to win.”

Ecclestone issues apology

SEBASTIEN Vettel of Aston Martin has been handed a suspended $12,500 fine by the stewards after he and his team-mate Esteban Ocon collided during the sprint qualifying at the Red Bull Ring.

Ocon was picked up by a corner in the third round and the stewards issued him with a warning for taking a risk.

The Frenchman had timed his run perfectly to meet the ball in the net, but his timing was off and he overran the ball.

He was then involved in an accident in the opening overtaking lap, ordered after Zhou Guanyu’s Alfa Romeo stalled.

But the Sri Lankan bowlers, especially the debutant Prithvi Shaw, had other plans. Wicketkeeper-batsman Alex Carey would be the first to be dismissed on Day 2, falling for 123, trying to attempt an audacious reverse-sweep against Swepson. The wicket would then be taken by Mitchell Starc on 6, giving for a risky wicket. That was to be the only joy that the Australian bowlers would enjoy for a substantial period of time.
